1.   Elevator pitch of your app idea:

My app is for people looking to find new board games and people to play them with. I want my app to have reviews for board games, to be able to chat with other board game players and the ability to be able to invite other people to play board games with you.

I want to make an app that is for board game review and for people to get together and play board games. What will make my app different form Board Game Geek (BBG), Board Game Stats and Board Game Bible is that it will have a feature that will allow people to find other people to play board games with. Instead of just rating board games. My app will differ from Meetups because my app will focus on board games.

The Board Game For Me

3.   App Description:

I want to make an app that will focus on board games for people in the treasure valley. The app will have reviews for board games and allow people to search for board games. I want to allow people (in the treasure valley for now) to get together and play board games. They will be able to make a post on a map that will give other users the location where they are playing, the name of the game, the amount of people they are looking for to play, and the type of board game it is. Other people can find their posts and click chat on the map and let the person know they are interested. Once the user that posted the invite finds people to play with they can remove the invite. If the invite never gets removed it will be removed automatically after an hour or two. If that user is still looking for people they would have to repost it. Or allow the user to have a timer between amounts of time no more than 3 hours or so and after that time out.

Love all the sketches. If you want, this can all run off of static JSON files: one for the board games and their data, another for users and their data, etc. That way you won't really need a server, for demonstration and class purposes. Later, you can build the server to support dynamic data, but you won't have to do that for the final project.

Also for the final project, just load up enough board games and their data to show off the potential of the app. So maybe 8 or more with images. You can store images in the app's bundle or via a Dropbox public link if you want to make it slightly more dynamic. There are nice libraries for loading images and caching those results, that are very easy to use.
